Glutamine is the most commonly found amino acid in the body, one of the 20 amino acids required in the body.

Glutamine is a non essential amino acid and is the most abundant free amino acid in muscle cells. Amino acids are the building blocks that form proteins to maintain cellular health and tissue repair.

Protein makes up the structure of all cells and tissues in the body, including muscle tissue, internal organs, tendons, skin, hair and nails. The 20 amino acids are the building blocks of protein. 12 of these amino acids can be made in the body so are referred to as non-essential amino acids, whilst the other 8 are known as essential amino acids as they must be supplied in the diet.
